What is extravasation? In a general sense, extravasation refers to the process by which one substance (e.g., fluid, drug) leaks into the surrounding tissue.¹ In terms of cancer therapy, extravasation is defined as the accidental leakage from its intended compartment (the vein) into the surrounding tissue.² Usually, this occurs when intravenous (IV) medication passes from the blood vessel into the Training works. Trade union trained health and safety reps give "added value," says Rees. As evidence, she points to a Health and Safety Executive-backed study that found trained reps are more likely go back to work and do something - for example, calling for formation of safety committees, undertaking health surveys, recruiting more safety reps and organising training days.

The phrases in this definition bring into focus three aspects of quality: services (interventions), targeted health outcomes, and consistency with current knowledge (research evidence). It expresses an underlying belief that research produces the most reliable knowledge about the likelihood that a given strategy will change a patient's current health status into desired outcomes.
